GasLand

[106 min]

S Y N O P S I S

Tension begins when Josh Fox researches a letter he receives at his rural PA farmhouse, inviting him to sell his land for $100,000 and permission to mine natural gas. His neighbors tell him horror stories about water contamination due to hydraulic fracturing.

Fox tours other states where the process has already contaminated myriad underground wells. His continuing investigation ties this unchecked chemical process to Dick Cheney's Halliburton activity and bills covertly passed during the Bush administration [and sustained under Obama].

Gasland sheds light on a practice that many American citizens have assumed is benign. This is grassroots documentary filmmaking at its finest. Gasland is edifying in the most entertaining and palatable way. --Trinie Dalton

"We've poured our poisons into the world as though it were a bottomless pit.. and we go on gobbling them up. It's hard to imagine how the world could survive another century of this abuse, but nobody's really doing anything about it. It's a problem our children will have to solve, or their children." ~Daniel Quinn, novelist (Ishmael)

"It is not the man who has little, but he who desires more, that is poor". ~Seneca, Roman statesman
